OUT OF CONFLICT

It is now almost a century since Britain partitioned Ireland. From the outset, violent repression of dissent and widespread discrimination defined the six counties that Unionists called Northern Ireland.

But, in the 1960s, small groups of courageous people, inspired by the civil rights movement in the United States, started to campaign for equality in public housing and employment and for an end to gerrymandering in local government. They asked for nothing other than basic rights enjoyed by people in England, Scotland, and Wales. And the Stormont regime responded with violence, battering them off the streets.

There, in the crack of RUC batons on the streets of Derry, the great lie was exposed - Unionists professed an attachment to Britain, but they could not countenance the rights accorded to everybody in Britain being extended to Nationalists in their Orange state.

The events set in train by the repression of the civil rights movement are well known. The British Government backed the Unionists. And in doing so it precipitated over a quarter century of conflict that only started to end in 1994, when the Irish Republican Army called a ceasefire.

That transformative ceasefire did not come out of thin air. It was the result of work, over many years, by Gerry Adams and others in the Sinn Féin leadership. The dialogue between Gerry Adams and John Hume was critical in the development of a peaceful progress to Irish reunification. But powerful figures in London and Dublin resisted this push for peace. However, among those who believed that we had the capacity to break the deadlock were our friends in North America. They included leaders in business and finance, the labor movement and politics. A vital element were the Irish Americans who lobbied their public representatives and engaged their attention. In doing so, they brought pressure to bear on the British and Irish governments to establish an inclusive talks process that, in 1998, resulted in the Good Friday Agreement.

The Peace Process has delivered. The RUC is gone. The British Army is off our streets. Slowly, the economies of North and South, severed and still stunted by partition, are being re-integrated. We have had over two decades of peace. The Republican cause remains the same and with Sinn Féin stronger than at any time since 1921, the great prize - the reunification of Ireland - is now within reach.

THE AGREEMENT
It's Your Decision

CHANGE IS AT HAND

Ireland has changed since partition. The last census taken in the North, in 2011, showed that 64 per cent of those aged over 90 were Protestant and 25 per cent were Catholic; 9 per cent had no declared religion. There, among the very old, is the demographic of the North around the time of partition. Conversely, the same census returned 31 per cent of children born in the North in 2008-11 as Protestant compared to 44 per cent Catholic; 23 per cent had no declared religion.

Reflecting on these data in the Unionist Belfast Telegraph, well-known economist David McWilliams observed that in one (admittedly long) lifetime, the Catholic population in the youngest cohort has nearly doubled, while the Protestant cohort has more than halved. For McWilliams, the numbers meant one thing: 'we seem to be en route to a united Ireland.'

Of course religious profession does not translate to a political position. Still, election results confirm Unionism to be losing its majority. In Spring 2017, elections for the 90-seat Assembly returned only 40 Unionists – nationalists took 39 seats (27 Sinn Féin; 12 SDLP); the Alliance Party, Greens and People Before Profit had 11 seats between them. The total number of votes cast for the Democratic Unionist Party (223,413), the largest pro-Union party, was only 1,168 votes greater than the number secured by Sinn Féin (224,245).

Measured by nothing other than its proponents' intention – the creation of 'a Protestant state for a Protestant people' – partition is a manifest failure.

And there are other measures of its failure. McWilliams focused on the economy. When the border was first drawn, he noted, over 80 per cent of Ireland's industrial output came from the area around Belfast. Now, the South's industrial output is ten times greater than that of the North – exports from the South are €69bn per annum (£77.85bn), fifteen times greater than the €6bn (£5.25bn) exported from the Six Counties.

One recent study, in 2015, by Kurt Huebner of the University of British Columbia, calculated that, within eight years, a reunified Irish economy would be some €35 billion larger than two separate economies, North and South.

Of course, the disaster that is partition was never simply economic. Lives lost, rights denied, grief, and despair are not best measured in numbers.

The price of partition has been too high. A United Ireland has always been the best framework for peace and prosperity.

UNITY IN OUR TIME

In voting for the Good Friday Agreement in 1998, the people of Ireland, North and South, affirmed that they alone would determine their future constitutional arrangements.

In June 2016, a majority in the United Kingdom voted to leave the European Union; the majority of people in the North voted to remain in the British Government of Northern Ireland, dependent for its survival on the support of the Unionist Party (UP), insisted that the North must stay with England, Scotland, and Wales. It repudiated the core principle of the Good Friday Agreement – that there would be no change to the constitutional status of the North without a simple majority of people, North and South, approving it. And in refusing to even consider some form of special status for the North, the British Government displayed arrogant indifference to the consequences for employment and education, social services, and, above all, peace in Ireland.

The Brexit Crisis has laid bare the injustice of partition as long as it exists the short-term interests of London, a minority – a minority in Ireland and in this instance, a minority even in the North – can prevail over a majority.

But the writing is on the wall. In summer 2015 former Democratic Unionist Party leader Peter Robinson, speaking in Glenties, County Donegal, argued that Unionists should prepare for a United Ireland. He would accept, he said, the results of a border poll in favor of reunification. "As soon as that decision is taken every democrat will have to accept such a decision. And he predicted that the wider Unionist community would accept it, and look to the protections that the Good Friday Agreement guarantees to all.

Given the collapse of Unionists' majority in the North, the challenge for their current leaders is simple – they must involve themselves with others, not least Republicans, in imagining the shape and form that Irish reunification takes.

In 2018 Deirdre Hargay became the sixth Sinn Féin councillor to serve as Mayor of Belfast – tellingly, all six Republican mayors have served since 2002. Speaking at her installation, party president Mary Lou McDonald reiterated the Republican position – Irish reunification is not about bolting the North onto the South. Rather, it is about creating an Ireland greater than the sum of all its parts – one defined by equality and inclusion, where sectarian division and segregation have no place, where all cultures are accorded respect, and where all our children enjoy the peace and prosperity necessary for achieving their full potential.

We ask you to stay with us on this journey. Your support and help has been invaluable in bringing us this far. You have given us hope during the most difficult times that the vision we share of Irish freedom and unity will be realized.

We ask that you support the Irish American Initiative of the McGuinness Principles to ensure the achievement of what Martin McGuinness dedicated his life to.

• Sinn Féin's party President Mary Lou McDonald, Mayor of Belfast Deirdre Hargay and party Vice-President Michelle O'Neill

With determination is not about holding the North onto the South. Rather, it is about creating an island greater than the sum of all its parts - one defined by equality and inclusion, where sectarian division and segregation have no place, where all cultures are recognized and respected, and where all our children enjoy the peace and prosperity necessary for achieving their full potential.

EQUALITY

THE ENACTMENT OF A BILL OF RIGHTS:

"We have pressed consistently for the establishment of a Bill of Rights in the North and an all-Ireland Charter of Rights" - Martin McGuinness

The terms of the Good Friday Agreement called for the adoption of a Bill of Rights in the North of Ireland. Twenty years after the Good Friday Agreement was ratified by more than 70% of the voters in the North of Ireland and 94% of the people in the Republic there is still no Bill of Rights. The Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission was mandated to put forward recommendations. In 2008, the Commission made proposals to the UK government recommending the recognition of a broad range of social and economic rights. Successive British governments have failed to affirmatively act on these recommendations. Now, with significant opposition from within the British government to continuing to accept the jurisdiction of European human rights conventions, and a determination to scrap the Human Rights Act, it becomes even more important that the rights of Ireland's citizens in the North be protected when it comes to critical human rights issues.

2 RESPECTFULL STATUTORY EQUALITY FOR THE IRISH LANGUAGE:

"Successive British Governments...have totally failed to meet their obligations...to protect the rights of the Irish language community" - Martin McGuinness

The Good Friday Agreement affirmed "the importance of respect, understanding and tolerance in relation to linguistic diversity, including in Northern Ireland, the Irish language, Ulster-Scots and the languages of the various ethnic communities, all of which are part of the cultural wealth of the island of Ireland... the British Government will, in particular in relation to the Irish language, where appropriate and where people so desire it: take resolute action to promote the language; facilitate and encourage the use of the language in speech and writing in public and private life where there is appropriate demand..."

Eight years later, under the terms of the St. Andrews Agreement of 2006, the British Government committed to introduce an Act to give the Irish language official status equal to that accorded the Scots Gaelic and Welsh languages. They failed to honor this obligation, and the Democratic Unionist Party explicitly repudiated it. Subsequent DUP moves in government to defund Irish language study were a major contributing factor to the resignation of Martin McGuinness as Northern Ireland's Deputy First Minister in 2017, when he cited that party's lack of "respect" for the rights and cultural traditions of the Irish nationalist community in the North.

3 TRUTHEQUAL JUSTICE FOR VICTIMS OF THE CONFLICT AND THEIR FAMILIES:

"Dealing with the legacy of the past remains one of the key outstanding challenges of our peace process. Unless it is dealt with in a comprehensive manner then the essential process of healing and reconciliation cannot gain momentum"

"Instead of working constructively to address the hurt and pain caused by the legacy of our recent conflict, the British Government has, at every turn, blocked and frustrated all efforts to reach a solution" - Martin McGuinness

Many victims of the conflict in the North and their families have waited decades to learn the full truth about what happened to them and their loved ones. Funding must be provided for proper inquests to move forward. The full story of collusion and cover-ups must be told, and those responsible for human rights abuses must be brought to justice.

SELF-DETERMINATIONTHERE MUST BE A REFERENDUM ON IRISH UNITY TO AFFIRM IRISH SELF-DETERMINATION:

"There is a democratic imperative to provide Irish citizens with the right to vote in a border poll on Irish unity to end partition and retain a role in the EU."

"A border poll on Irish unity is part of the process of building a modern and dynamic New Republic on this island – an agreed Ireland achieved by peaceful and democratic means." – Martin McGuinness

Under the terms of the Good Friday Agreement of 1998, the British Government committed to formally "recognize that it is for the people of Ireland alone, by agreement between the two parts respectively and without external impediment to exercise their right of self-determination on the basis of consent..." Provisions were included for referenda on Irish unity, whose results would be given effect by the governmental parties to the Agreement. The Agreement went on to commit that the signatory parties (including the British Government) should not "make any change in the status of Northern Ireland save with the consent of a majority of its people".

Despite the fact that Brexit clearly represents a "change in status" of Northern Ireland, and despite the fact that the people of the North voted by a large majority to reject Brexit and remain inside the European Union, the British government is determined to impose this very significant change (having potentially profound consequences for Ireland), on the people of Ireland north and south, against their democratically expressed wishes.

If the Good Friday Agreement's commitments to self-determination are to have any meaning, the British Government must allow the Irish people the opportunity to determine their future.

Late last year Irish American organizations began talking about how they could help secure the full implementation of the Good Friday Agreement and support efforts to advance Irish unity. They looked to previous examples of successful campaigns, the Sullivan and McBride Principles campaigns. As a result, they agreed to launch a campaign around the McGuinness Principles.

These four core principles - equality, respect, truth and self-determination - seek to address the current difficulties in the political process by defending human rights, supporting equality for the Irish language, the victims of the conflict and their families, and endorsing the demand for a referendum on Irish unity. In summary the campaign seeks:

- A Bill of Rights.
- Full statutory equality for the Irish Language.
- Funding for legacy inquests as part of the process of healing and reconciliation.
- A referendum on Irish unity in keeping with the Good Friday Agreement.

In the few months that the campaign has been running it has attracted significant political support. If you want to know more about the McGuinness Principles log on to:
